Blow.

For this reason and many others, actively enter the field at this time as a candidate for nomination for the presidency against President Tuft comes to me in the nature of a per-sonal blow. All along I had hoped against hope that he would not do it. If the president has not made a sin-cere and successful effort to carry out and extend his policies, I am unout and extend his policies, I am unable to read contemporary history with intelligence. I believe a renomination belongs to the president. I believe it belongs to him on the strength of his record of things done, of his pure and high character, of his almost boylah frankness of utierance, of the same progressiveness of his views, of his strong reverence for orderly procedure and approved practice, and by grace of the wise party tradition that one good term deserves another.
